Grade 1 Week 8

An eye exam is important

A thorough vision exam is in order now. Most pre-schoolers tend to be slightly far-sighted. At around six years, though, eyesight often begins to change. Some children become nearsighted. Tasks which require seeing well at a distance become increasingly difficult for them. Others may remain too far-sighted to see the print in their books clearly. The close seat work in Grade 1 can also hurt eyesight, especially if a child slouches or is uncomfortable in a chair that is too high or too low.

Real and imagined fears

SIX has fears. After the Halloween party at school, she may dramatically act out what witches and ghosts do. The fearful, excited tone in her voice gives away the fact that she lets her imagination re-ignite her dread. Now is the time to read stories about friendly ghosts, dress up in costumes, and dramatize until such fears are gone. One day she will shiver with pleasure at ghost stories instead of shivering with dread.

Parent-teacher relations

It's the end of the first grading period. SIX wants her teacher and her parents to know and like each other. Take advantage of this attitude to arrange a conference with the teacher. He or she will have much to share with you about how to help SIX make the adjustment to peers, school work, and the long school day. Schedule your meeting for after school. Visits during school hours resulting in mysterious conversations in the corner between parent and teacher can produce some real anxiety and fear in SIX, although parent/teacher interviews by phone usually pose no problem.
